1 Question 1 of 6

Do your buyers ask ChatGPT about what you sell?

1.2 billion a week is ChatGPT's reach, not your market's. If nobody asks it about your category, that reach belongs to someone else.

> “ChatGPT reaches 1.2 billion people each week.”

2 Question 2 of 6

Does your product work in one picture?

The new format is an image ad, shown while people generate images. If a single frame can't show what you sell, this format is a hard fit.

Testing begins later this month, in the US, with an initial group of advertisers.

3 Question 3 of 6

What does a customer cost you today?

OpenAI's headline number is relative to a benchmark. Without your own cost per customer from search or social, you can't tell a win from a cheap-looking click.

> WeightWatchers' attributed CPA was 15.3% lower than its blended paid-search benchmark.

4 Question 4 of 6

New customers, or ones who'd have found you anyway?

New visitors are not new sales. Hold back a region, compare, then scale the budget.

93% of Portland Leather's visitors from ChatGPT Ads were new. Geo experiments: Haus, Measured, WorkMagic.

5 Question 5 of 6

Can your sales flow back to the ad platform?

If purchases don't reach the platform, it can't learn who buys, and you're paying for impressions and guessing.

Conversion data via Hightouch, Tealium and LiveRamp; attribution via AppsFlyer, Triple Whale, Northbeam and others.

6 Question 6 of 6

What result makes you stop?

Write the spend cap and the cost-per-customer ceiling before the first ad runs, while a good-looking week can't argue with you.

Can't answer three of the six? Wait a month.

Let the first advertisers publish their numbers, then decide with yours.
